I landed in Buenos Aires today, but it could just as easily be heaven.

We arrived at the airport in Buenos Aires to electronic signs announcing our arrival. Joe and I were a bit sleepy from the overnight flight, so our driver, Hugo, whisked us to the luxurious Four Seasons in La Recoleta neighborhood. Staying at the Four Seasons is a treat in and of itself, but upon check-in we were greeted like kings and led to the Owner's Suite. Yes, that's right. I almost fell over with shock as the extremely attentive staff escorted us to the top floor of the hotel to the nicest place I will ever lay my head. I gazed out my window, which has to be the best view in all of Buenos Aires: straight down the Avenida 9 de Julio to the Obelisk of Buenos Aires, and the Four Seasons La Mansión and pool. Do I ever have to check out? I knew the theme for my Condé Nast Traveler trip was "Don't Go Quietly," but this was insane! The owner is from Dubai, so since he wasn't here, we got the room...amazing to say the least. Decorated with an Argentinian gaucho theme, it is rustic elegance at its finest.

Joe and I put on our bathing suits and headed for the infinity pool to lounge. The infinity pool was just renovated in November 2012...I think they were preparing for my arrival! As I was relaxing, I kept pinching myself. Can it really be 90° and sunny right now? Am I really here? I took a cat nap in my lounge chair and when I woke up I was still in that gorgeous place, so it must be real.

being a new arrival in Buenos Aires, I was a bit of a newbie. I had a few friends who were already in the city and they were able to help me get my bearings. I was a bit of a newbie, but I was able to get my bearings. I was a bit of a newbie, but I was able to get my bearings.
